A college youth alighted from a Pennsylvania avenue car yesterday afternoon and walked across the street to the klosk, where he stood looking at the thermometer for a few minutes.

It was 3 o'clock, an eventful hour in the history of the National Capital. The youth gazed at the mercury a few seconds in wonder, loath to believe his burnt features and he laughed.

"I love the good old summer time," he said, "but, oh, you, springtime breezes.

In a few words the youth expressed of persons who have existed in Washington since June 21, the day when the heat wave settled over the city like a hot blanket. Few persons knew at what bour the heat wave arrived, but nearly everybody knows when it left.
